Remarks by President

The year 2016 is coming to the end. This year will definitely leave a deep imprint on the world's political chronicles. In this year, the most prominent feature of international situation is that "Black Swan" events emerged one after another. In November, Donald Trump defeated Hillary Clinton, and won the presidential campaign, which was completely beyond the expectation of the world's most professional politicians, senior researchers and major media. In the United Kingdom European Union membership referendum in June, it was unexpected that the majority of voters voted to leave the European Union. The government of United Kingdom reformed a cabinet after the referendum, and the country will formally bid a farewell to the European Union. In July, the tribunal of the South China Sea Arbitration made a final ruling, which was in favor of the Philippines, and claimed that China has "no historical rights" on the South China Sea. China declared that the ruling was null and void. After the arbitration, the U.S. involved in the dispute with a high profile, suddenly bringing turbulence to the South China Sea dispute. What people hadn't expected was the sudden change in China-Philippines relations – Rodrigo Duterte, the new President of the Philippines, visited China in October, and during his visit, the two countries reached an understanding on the issue of South China Sea. In November, South Korean President Park Geun-hye apologized to nationals for the scandal of involving influence of a crony. She will be investigated by an independent counsel. Her prestige has plummeted since the scandal. Earlier before the scandal, the decision of the U.S. and South Korea to deploy the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense (THAAD) in South Korea caused a diplomatic row between China and South Korea. In May, Tsai Ing-wen assumed the regional leader of Taiwan, China, and refused to officially recognize the "1992 consensus" the two sides reached, resulting in a cooling in cross-strait relations. Since the beginning of 2016, many other issues also raised serious concerns, such as the slow recovery of world economy, the rising trade protectionism, deterioration in U.S.-Russian relations, the influx of Middle Eastern refugees into Europe and constant conflicts in the Middle East.

In this eventful year, the Institute of International & Strategic Studies (IISS), Peking University (PKU) continues to offer calm observation and in-depth analysis on international strategic situation. It has conducted domestic and international exchanges on development trend of world politics and many hot issues, published a number of treatises, commentaries and reports, and also provided advisory reports to decision-making organs. This spring, supported and sponsored by National Committee on United States-China Relations and China United States Exchange Foundation, we held a symposium for young and middle-aged scholars of international relations from both China and United States at the North Pavilion. We hope that the symposium can be held annually, so that we can build it into a new academic platform and brand. In October, the third annual meeting of "North Pavilion Dialogue" we held was highly praised by domestic and foreign strategists and think tank scholars. We also introduced current research trends of relevant domestic and foreign think tanks through our expanded networking platform. This annual report reflects our work processes and outcomes in this year.

We want to take this opportunity to express our gratitude for units and individuals that always support our work, including government agencies like the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, leaders and schools and departments of PKU, entrepreneurs, academic colleagues and students. We also want to thank Mr. Dai Bingguo, Former State Councilor of China and Honorary President of our Institute of International and Strategic Studies, for his consistent guidance and care. We can't predict if there would be any "Black Swan" events in the world in the year 2017, but we will make greater efforts and be more prepared to face new challenges.

Introduction of IISS

Officially founded in October 2013, the Institute of International and Strategic Studies (IISS), Peking University (PKU) was the former Center of International and Strategic Studies of Peking University established in May 2007. Dai Bingguo, the former State Councilor, was invited by PKU to serve as the honorary president of IISS. IISS is affiliated to the School of International Studies, PKU, and exists as an entity that can use “Peking University” in its name. Its Board of Directors is composed of senior scholars and experts in and out of the PKU, and the president responsibility system is implemented under the leadership of the Board.

IISS aims to promote the development of academic research and policy research related to world politics, international security and global strategy, etc. It focuses on the analysis of international situations that China faces as well as international strategy of related countries, then based on such analysis, publishes or presents research results to relevant authority that are characterized by policy significance and future vision. IISS is committed to providing intellectual support for China's decision-making as well as serving the teaching of relevant subjects. It also leads the public to understand issues related to national security and international strategy in a sound, correct and reasonable way. Its research results include the irregularly published International Strategic Studies Report, Think Tank Digest, Think Tank Frontier, the annually published China International Strategy Review(English and Chinese), International Strategy Research Series of Peking University, and research reports entrusted by government sectors, enterprises and public institutions.

In the trend of globalization, we have been witnessing an array of interwoven and interacting issues of politics, economy, military, science, technology, culture, religion and society around the world. The non-traditional security issues, such as ecological environment, public health and natural disasters, are becoming the subjects for international strategy research. IISS, PKU encourages the international strategy research to be done from interdisciplinary and multiple perspectives, striving to make innovation in theory and methodology while focusing on practical issues. IISS values the field research at home and abroad in international strategy study, encourages the completion of the research and presentation of insightful views of practical significance and policy influence on the basis of field research. IISS has been successfully undertaking and accomplishing many Projects of the National Social Science Fund of China and Major Key Projects of Philosophy and Social Science of the Ministry of Education; it also provides oriented researches and decision-making consultation services for the Foreign Affairs Office of the Communist Party, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the International Department of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, the National Defense University and the Academy of Military Science of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. The research results have been widely acclaimed. IISS boasts abundant academic resources for domestic and international study, maintains stable cooperation with well-known think tanks, universities and research institutions at home and abroad. It organizes many high-level domestic and international seminars, focusing on China's foreign policy, great power strategy, regional security, global governance and other important theories and policy issues. IISS's researchers often publish professional comments concerning major international issues through various forms to help the public understand the world objectively and rationally. IISS also has tasks of teaching and training in the field of international and strategic studies.

In recent years, as an emerging power, China has been more actively and deeply involved in the agenda of global governance, and has placed more influence on the agenda. China has not only provided the world with more public goods, but also begun to contribute Chinese thoughts and schemes to the world. For example, China has proposed the concept of "community of human destiny", the initiative of "the Belt and Road" and the principle of jointly building through consultation to meet the interests of all, and advocated for establishment of new types of international financial institutions, such as the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB), the Silk Road Fund and the New Development Bank (namely the BRICS Development Bank). Lin Jianhua, President of PKU, awarded Kevin Rudd the certificate of honorary professor of PKU. On the afternoon of that day, Prof. Joseph Nye gave a talk titled "Is the American Century Over?" at the SIS, PKU. departments of PKU, undertakes research topics commissioned by government agencies and enterprises, and is engaged in providing high-quality consulting services on China's international strategy and foreign policy. It has also established a closer partnership among think tanks and academic institutions around the world.

From 2014 on, IISS holds the "North Pavilion Dialogue" annually.

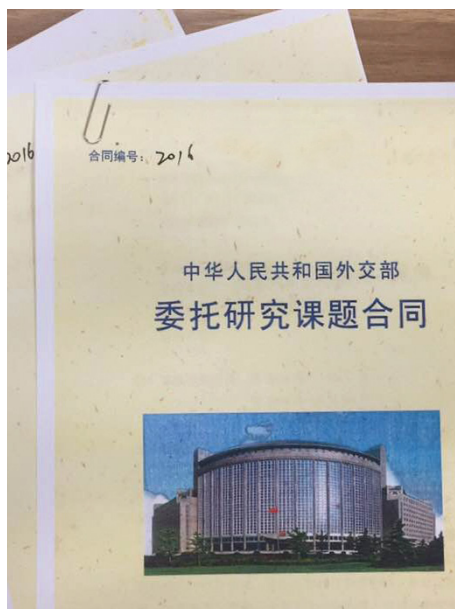

This is one of the initiatives of PKU to implement General Secretary Xi Jinping's instruction of "building new type of think tanks with Chinese characteristics". IISS plans to progressively build the "North Pavilion Dialogue" into a high-profile platform to facilitate exchanges and cooperation among domestic and foreign peers in the international strategic community and enable them to make accurate judgments of the world situation, help China play an international role and promote win-win cooperation and inclusive development in global politics.

2016 Presidential Election Of The U.S. And Its Political Development

The 2016 Presidential Election of the U.S. is a key milestone in the political development of the U.S. since President Obama took office. The new President, Congress and Governors will have a direct impact on the trend of domestic and foreign policy of the U.S. for at least four years. Political situation in this election showed some development features. Many factors will bring new situation to the politics of the U.S., they are: stability of party rotation and instability of policy agenda in presidential politics, the trend of "anti-establishment camp" replacing political elite and spread of "vetocracy", the changing party primaries ecology and generational politics, changes of ethnicity, gender and other social issues, the trend of regional restructuring as well as the possibility of the beginning of a new political cycle. Combined with historical experience of political development in the U.S., our observation on the first open presidential election in post financial crisis era and analysis of the logic political development in the U.S. will help us understand and predict prospects and challenges of the country.

Building Currency Fulcrum Countries In The Process Of Internationalization Of RMB

RMB, an important part of China's growing strength, is facing challenges from China's economic development, international economic situation, international political competition and many other aspects during its rising. Realizing the impact of allowing free play of market forces on the failure of internationalization of Japanese yen, we need to monitor international political basis for the internationalization of RMB. Especially when China's economic growth is slowing down and downward pressure has been put on RMB, building key currency fulcrum countries is essential for the RMB's rise. As the sovereign states that provide long-term, stable and strategic support for international currencies, currency fulcrum countries play a strong supportive and demonstration role. Based on China's actual conditions, the Chinese Government should adopt appropriate policy instruments to develop strategy of currency fulcrum countries that can contribute to the rise of RMB. "Currency fulcrum countries" is an innovative concept, which reveals the significance of China's money diplomacy for internationalization of RMB based on the analysis of international political environment of internationalization of RMB with the perspective of international political economics.

Research On Energy Cooperation And Conflict Resolution Mechanisms Between Russia And The Commonwealth Of independent States (CIS) Countries

As an important part of political and economic exchanges, energy cooperation between Russia and CIS countries has undergone twists and turns. Understanding the nature and trend of energy cooperation between the two sides and its impact on neighboring countries is important for the understanding of content and role of the existing mechanisms of international energy cooperation and the effective promotion of China's foreign energy cooperation. Factors, such as energy endowment of CIS countries, division of the Soviet Union's energy industries, direction of energy transportation facilities, are the basis for Russia and CIS countries establishing energy cooperation and depending on each other, which have also effectively restricted and inhibited the outbreak and escalation of conflicts. Energy conflicts are rooted in the difference of "market power" that each side holds, while politicization of "political power" is the immediate cause of conflicts. Both of them have explained why the international mechanisms fail to provide effective methods to resolve conflicts. By overcoming the difference in "market power", namely, "depoliticizing", we can ultimately revolve energy conflicts between Russia and CIS countries. Yet, as the measure will definitely be boycotted by countries whose interests are impaired, we still need to have more observation on it.

Dialogue On Historical Understanding And The Future Of China-Japan Relations Between People with visions in China And Japan

Failing to reach sufficient consensus on issues of historical understanding of China and Japan is one of the major obstacles for developing China-Japan relations. Today, the vast majority of people in China and Japan have not experienced the war. People of the two countries reaching more consensus on issues of historical understanding is essential for building a future-oriented and cooperation-focused China-Japan relations. In light of that, the IISS, PKU and The Sasakawa Peace Foundation decided to establish a joint research project, "historical understanding and the future of China-Japan relations – dialogues of people of vision", which will conduct in-depth discussions on issues of historical understanding, such as causes, nature, impact and lessons of the Sino-Japanese War from 1931 to 1945, so as to deepen understanding and build consensus. Based on consensus of the two sides on historical understanding, the research project will comb practical problems the two countries are facing and seek solutions to them, and explore the future China-Japan cooperative relations. The primary objective of the project is to explore the future of China-Japan relations and promote the healthy and stable development of China-Japan relations.

The Project Commissioned By The Ministry Of Public Security: Comprehensive Evaluation On Effectiveness Of Ten Years' Implementation Of Substitute Plantation In China

Substitute plantation policy is China's anti-drug measure that addresses root causes of drugs. Since the implementation of the policy, the international cooperation on drug control between China and its neighboring countries like Myanmar and Laos has achieved initial effectiveness in many aspects. It has also played an important role in eliminating harm of drugs, helping Chinese enterprises "going out" and maintaining border security and social stability. However, substitute plantation is under the pressure of rebound. People of neighboring countries are also concerned about issues caused by substitute plantation, such as trespass to land and damage to the environment. The project aims to comprehensively review the implementation of substitute plantation policy in China, systemically assess the effectiveness and problems of the policy, and propose suggestions on optimizing the policy in the next 5-10 years based on the comprehensive studying and determining of future international drug control environment, relations between China and relevant neighboring countries and development trend of substitute plantation.

China-U.S. Think Tanks Joint Research

Over a period, China-U.S. relations are generally stable, but challenges and frictions are also gaining, and strategic differences have appeared. On November 8, 2016, Donald Trump won the 45th presidential election of the U.S., and will take the oath of office in January 2017. Meanwhile, the 19th National Congress of the Communist Party of China is expected to be held in the autumn of 2017. At this point between important political cycles of the two countries, people in the strategic and research fields of China and the U.S. are concerned about the development of bilateral relations. In March 2016, the National Institute of International Strategy of Chinese Academy of Social Sciences launched the "China-U.S. think tanks joint research" project, and reached joint research intention with the U.S. side in June.

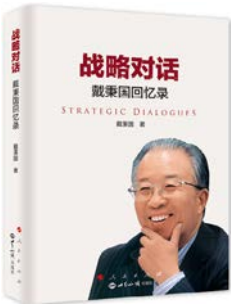

The project has organized a team of Chinese and American experts and scholars, and with joint research approach and in a pragmatic and constructive manner, it aims to demonstrate views and concerns on policies in some important areas of bilateral relations, explore specific issues affecting the prospects for China-U.S. relations, propose suggestions and provide information the two societies can refer to.
